

Buckeye Brief #11

Ohio State's nationally recognized Chinese language program prepares students for interaction with the world's fastest growing political and economic power. In addition to studying Chinese language, history, and culture, students learn through ongoing contact with experts invited from China.

The graduate-level Chinese Flagship Program is part of the National Security Education Program in the National Foreign Language Initiative, which focuses on languages designated "critical" to U.S. security. Flagship Program students study and work in both Columbus and China to acquire top-level cultural and language proficiency.

Ohio State's K-12 Chinese Flagship Program partners with the Ohio Department of Education and school districts to bring effective language training to pre-college students and teachers.

Global citizens require global skills.
