Ohio's college students and their families want the best value for their dollar.

Cleveland-area student and class valedictorian Rachel Kominsky chose molecular genetics at Ohio State over Cornell, Northwestern and the University of Pennsylvania, among others.

Smart choice, says SmartMoney. The magazine compared tuition costs to graduate earning power and found Ohio State students earn an average of 179 percent return on their educational investment. The university ranked 11th best nationally—ahead of almost every school in the Midwest and all Ivy League universities.

SmartMoney confirmed what Kominsky already knows—degrees from Ohio State pay off.
